fiscal conservatives who currently control Congress would support Greene's measures, but that is not the case. Greene announced:

Leadership is only allowing three to go to the floor of the House for a vote. ... [Republican congressional leaders] blocked my amendments to stop sending money to Ukraine, Israel, Syria, the other hand, 76 bold congressmen—all of whom were Republicans—voted in favor of Greene's amendment to cut funding for the military of Ukraine. Recently, Greene went on left-wing talk show "The Young Turks" to explain why the United States can no longer afford to fund foreign militaries like the Israel Defense Forces and the Ukrainian armed forces. She told the hosts:

We're $37 trillion in debt. ... We shouldn't be funding foreign countries, because America's broke, and we really need to get focused on our own country and our own people's problems.

Specifically, she cited amendments to remove $600 million for Ukraine as well as several amendments to strip funding from Israel that include $500 million for the military as well as $55 million for Israel's counter drone program and another $70 million to root out the tunnels Palestinian fighters use to fight back against Israeli forces. Greene singled out Israel for the amount of taxpayers' money Congress appropriates annually for that country's military. Greene said:

[T]he U.S. already provides nuclear-armed Israel with $3.8 billion annually in foreign aid. In 2024, in the security supplemental, we gave $8.7 billion to Israel. During the recent 12-day war with Iran in June, the U.S. used 15% to 20% of our terminal high altitude area defense missile stockpile defending Israel. That cost the United States somewhere over $800 million.

Blasting her critics, Greene added: It's not anti-Semitic to say America should keep our money and invest our own hard-earned tax dollars in our own interest, especially for a country like

Once again, Rep. Marjorie Taylor Greene (R-Ga.) is taking a stand and putting America first. In early September, the Georgia Republican congresswoman introduced eight "America only" amendments to the massive $925 billion National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) that would strip all funding for foreign militaries, including Syria, Ukraine, Iraq, and, importantly, Israel. While the NDAA does not provide the actual funding for the Department of War, it does authorize and define the funding levels as requested by the White House and Congress.

The United States is $37 trillion in debt to global bankers. One would think that the self-avowed Iraq, and border security for other countries.

A search of congressional roll calls showed the amendments that the Republican leadership did allow votes on failed, some by sizable margins. For example, H.Amdt. 55, which strikes hundreds of millions of dollars in "funding for the Israeli Cooperative Programs" failed by a vote of 6-422.

Despite the ongoing genocide in Gaza, the only members of Congress to vote against funding more death and destruction were Reps. Al Green, (D-Texas), Ilan Omar (D-Minn.), Marjorie Taylor Greene (R-Ga.), Summer Lee, (D-Pa.), Thom as Massie (R-Ky.), and Rashida Tlaib (D-Mich.). On

For too long, voices like Greene's have been rare in Washington, but her points make sense, especially after President Donald Trump promised on the campaign trail to get America's out-of-control spending under control Greene concluded:

My argument is we've got so many problems here at home. ... I really want to see the United States Congress focus on the American people.

Our Mission Statement

A Warning from the F.B.I.:

"The individual is handicapped by coming face-to-face with a conspiracy so monstrous he cannot believe it exists. The American mind simply has not come to a realization of the evil which has been introduced into our (Federal Government.)"

— J. Edgar Hoover

The purpose of this national publication is three fold:

To organize the firearms industry into one powerful political voice (and action) to stop the contagion of corruption that is spreading from Washington D.C. to all 50 of the sovereign states of our Constitutional Republic and their good citizens.

To engage Congress, wherein we use our collective and powerful voices to compell your Representatives to obey the Law and their solemn oaths of office.

To enforce said law of 1792 upon the leftists, RINO's, and defacto Communists who have infested the people's House of Representatives as well as the U.S. Senate. The repeated violation of Congressional oaths will cease and desist. The Law of Title 18 ~ Section 4 proclaims violation of oath to be a felony (perjury) and a criminal act! The punishment thereof, is out of necessity severe: impeachment from office and jail.

Can the N.F.C. and "we the gun owners of America," actually enforce such a law and remove these traitors from office and select new candidates who will actually serve our individual and national interests? You betcha!

We don't need any lawyers; we don't need judicial lawsuits; and we don't need to use our guns like they did in 1776. All we need is current laws (and old ones also) to be enforced. Our Constitution is the law to govern our government, and it equips and empowers we the people to do this very thing. Yet such knowledge has fallen into obscurity amongst the American people. We aim to change that, by teaching our readers how to make their representatives accountable to the rule of law in any of the 435 Congressional Districts of our Republic! It is actually easy, when you know how, and costs very little money.

The N.F.C. and its members are force: A force to be feared by any Congressman or Senator who dares to violate their oaths and abuse their positions of trust and power.

The N.F.C. is a P.A.C. But we are not merely playing political games as so many are prone to do. We aim to go on the offensive, and purge our once great government of the 400 or so traitorous turkeys in the House that have heretofore thought themselves and acted as though they are above the law. To those whom this concerns, we would issue the following admonition: "Hell is coming to breakfast, Sir or Madame. Resign now or suffer the consequences!"

Closing Remarks

There are several other gun organizations that we respect and financially support through paid dues that we happily acknowledge are making some very commendable efforts to protect the 2nd Amendment.

Delaware Superior Court Strikes Down Under-21 Firearm Purchase Restrictions

A Delaware Superior Court judge has upheld her oath of office in a September ruling, and in so doing, has secured a decisive win for gun rights. The ruling upheld that the state's 2022 law banning handgun purchases by adults under 21 is unconstitutional.

The law, passed as House Bill 451, raised the minimum age for purchasing most firearms from 18 to 21, with narrow exceptions for shotguns, muzzleloaders, and certain government roles. It also restricted hunting rights for young adults unless supervised.

Judge Reneta Green-Streett rejected the state's justification, stating that the law infringes on the right of 18- to 20-year-olds to defend themselves, their families, and their homes. Her ruling affirms that constitutional rights do not hinge on age-based political preferences.

The decision comes just ahead of hunting season and restores lawful access to handguns for thousands of Delaware residents.

It's important to note that this case highlights a growing trend of states attempting to chip away at the Second Amendment through bureaucratic maneuvering. But as this ruling shows, the Constitution doesn't bend to political fashion. Rights delayed are rights denied.

The state may appeal, but for now, the age-based restriction is unenforceable. ⭐

California Approves Unconstitutional Bill Banning Glock Sales

California lawmakers have passed Assembly Bill 1127, as of this past October in a move that gun owners and gun rights activists recognize to be yet another backdoor attempt at gun control. The bill effectively bans the sale of many Glock pistols, prohibiting licensed dealers from selling any handgun deemed "convertible" into a machine gun — a vague and sweeping definition that conveniently captures popular models like the Glock 17 and 19.

While so-called "Glock switches" are already illegal under federal law, AB 1127 goes further by banning entire categories of firearms based on theoretical misuse.

The bill does not require evidence that a specific pistol has been modified — only that it could be.

This preemptive logic sets a dangerous precedent, punishing lawful gun owners for crimes they haven't committed and targeting manufacturers for the actions of criminals.

Governor Gavin Newsom has 30 days to sign the bill into law. If enacted, it will further erode the rights of Californians to own common handguns and may trigger immediate legal challenges.

This is not about safety — it's about control. And it's another reminder that the fight for our rights is far from over. ⭐

Florida Lawmakers Consider Curbing Age Restrictions on Gun Purchases

Florida lawmakers are considering a long-overdue correction to the state's unconstitutional age restrictions on firearm purchases, potentially restoring rights to law-abiding adults aged 18 to 20.

A proposal gaining traction in the Florida Legislature would lower the minimum age to purchase rifles and other long guns from 21 back to 18, reversing a 2018 law passed in the wake of the Parkland shooting. That law, signed by then-Governor Rick Scott, raised the age requirement despite clear constitutional protections for legal adults.

The current push to repeal it reflects growing recognition that age-based bans violate both the Second Amendment and the equal protection rights of young adults.

Supporters of the repeal argue that if 18-year-olds can vote, serve in the military, and be held legally accountable as adults, they should not be denied the right to defend themselves or their families.

Critics, predictably, cite public safety concerns—but the data doesn't support blanket bans. Criminals don't follow age laws. Law-abiding citizens do.

The proposed change would not affect handgun purchases, which remain restricted under federal law, but it would restore access to long guns for thousands of Floridians. If passed, it would mark a significant victory for constitutional carry and individual liberty in the Sunshine State. ⭐

Ohio Bill Aims to Restrict Concealed Carry for Transgender People

Ohio lawmakers are advancing a controversial amendment to House Bill 68 that would prohibit transgender individuals from obtaining or renewing concealed carry permits if their state-issued ID does not match their biological sex.

While critics frame the measure as discriminatory, supporters argue it addresses legitimate concerns about mental health and public safety.

The core issue is not identity—it's stability. A wide body of clinical data acknowledges that gender dysphoria is often accompanied by serious psychological distress, including depression, anxiety, and suicidal ideation.

Under existing federal and state laws, individuals suffering from certain mental illnesses may be restricted from purchasing or carrying firearms. This amendment seeks to apply that standard consistently.

Opponents claim the bill unfairly targets a marginalized group, but gun rights advocates counter that the Second Amendment presumes responsible, mentally sound ownership. If someone's mental health condition raises red flags under existing statutes, it is not unconstitutional to restrict access.

The bill is likely to become a lightning rod for national controversy, as it forces a long-avoided conversation about the intersection of gender identity, mental health, and constitutional rights into the public square. ⭐

“You Don’t Know What You Don’t Know?”

Famous Words by J. Edgar Hoover

Kit Carson

The website of the National Firearms Coalition of the Republic (2nd-acp.com) is the powerful lawful foundation of this newspaper. If “We the People,” or we the Gun Owners, are going to take back our American Republic than the solution is simple:

1. Get informed on the powerful laws we have at our discretion.
2. Join up now with N.F.C.R.
3. “Lock and load” for an immediate battle to evict your own traitorous Congress member.

President Trump is fighting hard against corruption and against agents of the Deep State, but he has no control or power over the corrupt Congress.

WE THE GUN OWNERS HAVE CONTROL OVER CONGRESS —if you, Sir, will wake up and smell the gunpowder!

By “Lock and load” I mean learn the law, and by gunpowder I mean LAWFUL FORCE. the only thing Congress members understand is force: be it bribes, gifts, lawsuits (the traitors are exempt from lawsuits while in office), or blackmail. Nothing else seems to compell the Democrats or RINOs to vote according to their respective Oath of Office.

The first thing you need to do is read the law that we can enforce—whereby we can literally remove from office any traitor Congress member who violates his Oath! They commit these violations constantly and with impunity—and no nation can hope to survive that tolerates such malfeasance from its elected officials!

Federal statutory law prescribes their oath violation as a felony, and even defines their punishment as follows:

“The individual is handicapped by coming face-to-face with a conspiracy so monstrous he cannot believe it exists. The American mind simply has not come to a realization of the evil which has been introduced into our (Federal Government.)”

— J. Edgar Hoover

Eviction from office. A $10,000 fine. And jail time. We the members of N.F.C.R. “don’t need lawyers; we don’t need lawsuits,” we just need to file criminal complaints on your Congressman.

Yes, I’m 100% serious! Knowledge is power. If you’re reading this and don’t instantly know what I’m talking about, than you lack knowledge of this law and simple knowledge of how to file a criminal complaint against a corrupt Congress person. Therefore, you and one or two friends need to read/learn the law and how to enforce it against our enemies.

I implore you to immediately go to the N.F.C.R. homepage and learn what you have never been taught in school.

When you read the home page links, you will understand the Law and what this newspaper is all about.

In truth, what N.F.C.R. (National Firearms Coalition of the Republic) truly is in practice, is a PAC. And when you are ready to take this information and put it into action, you will have our full support. We will help any one of our members file their criminal complaint.

Check out every link therein—even the three videos. Visit the National Firearms Coalition website at: 2nd-acp.com to get started on mastering this vital information.

It’s 1776 all over again, and this is how you arm yourself for the long fight ahead of us.

Thank you for your consideration.

A Republic . . . IF You Will Enforce It

How the Founders Empowered Us to Hold Oath Violators Accountable

Jacob Tyler

When Benjamin Franklin emerged from the Constitutional Convention in 1787, a woman approached him and asked what kind of government they had created. His reply was legendary:

“A republic ma’am—if you can keep it.”

This was not a boast. It was a warning.

There are many today who say the Constitution is a failed document. Nothing could be further from the truth. But we can hardly blame people for thinking so when even a supposedly iconic conservative president like George W. Bush reportedly said, “The Constitution is just a gd piece of paper,” and that it seems that as far as most of Washington D.C. is concerned, this is the only real “American Gospel.”

But here’s the deeper tragedy: the biggest reason people come to believe the Constitution has failed is not the rampant corruption and power abuses of government—it’s the neglect of the people to recognize what the Constitution actually is.

The Constitution doesn’t do anything on its own. It doesn’t fail or succeed. It empowers. It empowers us—the people—by making us an eternal dynasty occupying the true highest office in the land. Higher than the President. Higher than Congress. The people are given the power not only to hold elected officials accountable and judge whether a law has been broken, but to judge the law itself. As anyone who’s ever watched a superhero movie or read a comic book knows, “With great power comes great responsibility.” So, in point of fact, it is not the Constitution that has failed us. But rather we the people, who have failed the Constitution.

The Oath of Office is no mere formality. It is a Sacred Contract and Covenant. Every elected official swears an oath to “support and defend the Constitution of the United States.” That includes the Bill of Rights, which enshrines our most fundamental liberties—speech, religion, due process, and yes, the Second Amendment.

To violate that oath is not just a political betrayal. It is a breach of public trust, and in the Founders’ eyes, it was tantamount to civil treason.

The Founders’ Enforcement Mechanisms

The Founder Fathers didn’t leave us powerless against treachery. They gave us tools—legal, moral, and constitutional—to hold oath breakers accountable:

- Article VI of the Constitution: Mandates the oath and binds every official to it. No exceptions. No escape.

- Jury Nullification of Law: Affirmed by Chief Justice John Jay in Georgia v. Brailsford (1794) and protected by the Fifth Amendment’s double jeopardy clause. Jurors have the right to judge both the facts and the law. If a statute violates the Constitution, the people can refuse to enforce it—nullifying unjust laws and shielding liberty from bureaucratic overreach. Meaning all the gobbledygook masquerading as statutes—designed to shield oath breakers from righteous retribution—can be annulled, repealed, and rendered powerless by the people, even before formal dissolution.

- State-Level Remedies: Early state constitutions empowered citizens to remove officials for misconduct, malfeasance, or oath violations. Today, at least 19 states still allow recall elections. In Virginia, citizens can initiate a recall trial in circuit court. Some states require no specific reason (“no-fault” recalls); others demand proof of malfeasance or neglect of duty.

- Statutory Enforcement: Many states criminalize oath violations. For example, Georgia Code § 16-10-1 (2024) states:

“Any public officer who willfully and intentionally violates the terms of his oath... shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment.”

- Common Law Accountability: Historically, betrayal of public duty was treated as criminal misconduct—not political inconvenience. Citizens could file complaints, grand juries could indict, and local courts could act swiftly.

- Historical Precedent: William Penn’s 1670 trial, where jurors refused to convict under unjust law, laid the foundation for nullification and citizen resistance.

- Modern Obstruction: Federal courts now dismiss serious cases against IRS and federal officials as “frivolous,” even when constitutional arguments are sound. This is not justice—it’s judicial insulation.

The System Is Rigged—But Not Impenetrable

These statutes still stand. These remedies are not theoretical. They are real, accessible, and criminally under-utilized. All they need is diligent citizens who are ready to reclaim their throne, and wield them.

Yes, the system has been gerrymandered to favor oath breakers. Yes, judges run interference by dismissing as “frivolous” cases in which the truth comes to light in a way that cannot be argued.

But ask yourself: When was the last time we saw a nationwide campaign of accountability? When did we last see serious fundraising, coordinated citizen action, and influential leaders rallying against corruption with extreme prejudice? We haven’t. And that’s the point.

The means of asserting our power still exist. They’re dusty, neglected, and buried under cynicism. But if we use them—together, relentlessly, and unapologetically—we will see results.

If They Shift the Goalposts—We must Shift the Battlefield. If they dismiss our cases, we must declare the laws null and void. If they protect traitors, we must demand repeal of those protections. If they refuse, we must threaten impeachment—not as a bluff, but as a constitutional mandate.

We must demand the reinstatement of state-level statutes that criminalize oath violations. We must demand grand jury access, citizen oversight, and the vengeful return of real consequences.

Power to the people? A thousand times, yes. The Founders gave us the power. The Constitution still lives and breathes. The question is not whether the system works. The question is whether we will work the system. When we the American people do this—with unity, conviction, and extreme prejudice against oath violators—no lawyer, judge, or politician will be able to stand in our way.

It is on that day, and not before, that America will begin to be truly great once again. ★

Spotlight On Congress:

Seven Representatives Who Are Defending Your 2A Rights

N.F.C.T. Editorial Staff

In an age where misinformation moves faster than facts and political doublespeak has become currency, The National Firearms Coalition Today stands firm as a trusted voice for liberty-loving Americans.

Our mission is more than reporting—it's to sound a clarion call to vigilance. By delivering timely, transparent coverage on the conduct of Congress and its impact on your Second Amendment rights, we empower our readers not just to vote in their interests—but to recognize the enemies of the Republic masquerading as its stewards.

Because truth isn't just an ideal—it's our first line of defense. That's why constitutional literacy is at the heart of our work: we believe an informed citizenry is a protected citizenry.

As of July 24, 2025, the battle over the Second Amendment in Congress is heating up. With the Trump-Vance administration supporting expanded constitutional carry and federal agencies under pressure, it's time the American gun community takes stock of its allies—and calls out its betrayers.

“The Second Amendment was never intended to be a suicide pact.”

Where the Fight Goes from Here

With pro-2A bills like the FIRE and SHARE Acts gaining traction and constitutional carry reaching 28 states, momentum is on our side. But Red Flag laws, SAFE Act 2.0 proposals, and ATF overreach still loom like storm clouds over liberty.

While elected officials sell their oaths to the highest bidder and brandish the pen of betrayal, the Bill of Rights bleeds. The Second Amendment, once a shield against tyranny, now grimaces under the weight of complacency and corruption.

Gun owners, this is our line in the sand. We must be louder than their backroom bargains, more resolute than their party platforms. The price of freedom has never been comfort—it has always been vigilance. When the rot runs deep in the marble halls of power, it is not the politicians who save the Republic. It is the people.

Call your representatives. Not once. Not twice. But over and over until they answer. Demand transparency. Reject compromise. Rally your communities. Educate your neighbors. And above all—vote like liberty depends on it. Because it does.

A Blueprint for Action

Step 1: Demand Action

- Use the GOA Legislative Action Center to track votes and call out betrayal in real time.
- Organize local watchdog groups to monitor your reps’ behavior and document violations of their oath.

Step 2: Enforce Accountability Through Impeachment and Lawfare

If your representatives vote against the Second Amendment despite public opposition:

- Federal officials (including members of Congress) can be impeached for “high crimes and misdemeanors,” which includes abuse of office or betrayal of constitutional duty.
- Start by rallying support for impeachment through petitions, town halls, and pressure campaigns. The House holds the power to impeach; the Senate tries the case.

Expulsion

- Each chamber of Congress can expel its own members with a two-thirds vote. This is a powerful tool when impeachment isn’t viable.
- Mobilize constituents and allied organizations to demand expulsion for oath-breaking behavior.
- Partner with legal advocacy groups like Second Amendment

Foundation (SAF) or Firearms Policy Coalition (FPC) to file lawsuits against unconstitutional laws and policies.

- Use platforms like Giffords Courtwatch to track active litigation and support amicus briefs.

Step 3: Fire Them at the Ballot Box

- Expose anti-2A voting records with flyers, social media campaigns, and local and/or independent media.
- Support primary challengers who are willing to rock the boat.
- Use recall elections (where available) to remove state-level officials before their term ends.

Step 4: Educate and Mobilize

- Host constitutional literacy events to teach citizens their rights and how to enforce them.
- Encourage civic action through peaceful protest, media engagement, and coalition building.
- Share action alerts across social and local media.
- Build civic coalitions: churches, clubs, veterans groups—unite for impact.
- Close ranks and coordinate efforts with every like-minded individual and organization that you can find.
- Subscribe and Share The National Firearms Coalition Today. Our mission is clear: to educate, enflame, and empower the citizen. Every issue arms you with knowledge and reminds the our readers about how we are part of not just something much bigger than ourselves, but of the battle in our time to save our Republic from the whims and wiles of Malthusians, madmen, and megalomaniacs.

As the Nation Mourns Charlie Kirk, Leftists, Not Conservatives, Continue Political Violence

Paul Angel

In the past several years, a heated debate has arisen over who is committing the most acts of political violence in America.

Depending on which side they are on—the “left” or the “right”—politicians and media pundits scramble to either prove or deny the affiliation and motivation of a killer, before they even have all the facts.

Recently, the claim has been made that “white supremacists” (also called “far right-wingers” or neo-Nazis) are responsible for more than “70% of all domestic terror attacks” in the United States, and that we should all be scared stiff of these “white supremacists.”

For instance, in mid-September, Rep. Jasmine Crockett (D-Texas) said during a hearing with FBI Director Kash Patel:

I don't know who feels safe in this country except for the white supremacists, because I, specifically, as a black woman, definitely don't feel safe.

Someone should tell Ms. Crockett that 94% of the homicides of black women in America are carried out by black boyfriends and acquaintances. It is interesting, however, that the Trump Justice Department scrubbed a report from its website just after the assassination of Charlie Kirk. The report stated that:

Since 1990, far-right extremists have committed far more ideologically motivated homicides than far-left or radical Islamist extremists, including 227 events that took more than 520 lives. In this same period, far-left extremists committed 42 ideologically motivated attacks that took 78 lives.

Several years ago, a fellow I knew working for the State Department in terror threat assessment told me of the frustration FBI agents he was working with felt about the issue.

One related a story in which his FBI handler told him to “find some white supremacists.” When the agent reported that, after months of investigation, he was finding it hard to dig up any real “white supremacists,” his boss told him to “invent some.”

This, of course, was during the Biden administration, when the Democrats were trying to convince Americans of all stripes that each and every white person was at heart a “racist terrorist.”

It was also at this time that left-wing George Floyd fanatics committed nationwide arson, vandalism, looting, and murder, causing an estimated $1–2 billion in damages. This made it the costliest civil disorder in U.S. history. Fast forward to the second era of Trump. Since then, things have gotten worse. According to The Atlantic, a well known mouthpiece for liberal thought, “For the first time in more than 30 years, attacks by the far left outnumber those by the far right.” They then go on to blame it all on Trump.

So, let's take a look at some recent events to get an idea of who is really committing the most political violence in the age of Trump:

- On July 13, 2024, Thomas Crooks attempted to assassinate right-wing candidate Trump, who was speaking at a campaign rally near Butler, Pa.

- On Sept. 15, 2024, left-winger Ryan Routh went to Trump International Golf Club in West Palm Beach, Fla. with the intent of assassinating him.

- In the period from January to June 2025, there have been at least 150 politically motivated attacks in America, almost all committed by leftists, communists, and their allies.

- Since January, at least 21 people have been killed by political violence, 14 of them in an attack in New Orleans on New Year's Day by an American-born leftist claiming loyalty to ISIS.

- In May, a left-wing pro-Palestinian activist murdered two Israeli embassy employees in Washington, D.C.

- In July, a group of at least 11 militants in black military-style clothing attacked an immigration detention center in Texas. The group set off small explosions, spray-painted “traitor” and “ICE Pig” on vehicles, and shot a responding police officer in the neck, wounding him. Another sprayed gunfire at Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) guards.

- On Sept. 12, 2025, a left-wing assassin murdered Christian activist Charlie Kirk. It was clear from the “anti-fascist” messages etched on one of the bullet casings that he was not going to be voting Republican anytime soon.

- On Sept. 22, a left-winger opened fire on an ICE facility in Dallas, killing one and severely wounding two more. According to the FBI, he had “anti-ICE” messaging on at least one bullet.

For decades, there was little difference between the Republican and Democratic parties on the main issues of the day until, that is, Trump was elected.

However, Democrats have since embraced all manner of far-leftist lunacy, such as the promotion of transgenderism as “normal,” mass Third World immigration on a scale unseen before in U.S. history, and a plethora of DEI programs. Their refusal to sincerely and vociferously condemn left-wing violence against the right is disturbing.

In truth, currently, both left-wing and right-wing news outlets stoke the flames of division at every opportunity. But here is the truth: When one looks back at history, it is almost always the left that instigates violence and revolution against political opponents. If you doubt that, you may want to bone up on left-wing revolutions: 40,000 people executed in the French Revolution's Reign of Terror; 55 million Russians killed during the Bolshevik era; 45 million killed in China under Mao Tse-Tung; 2 million killed under communist leader Pol Pot; 50,000 killed during the “Red Terror” in Ethiopia in the 1970s; and thousands killed by the Marxist regime in Nicaragua. The list could go on and on. (Note, over a third of the U.S. presidents in the 20th century endured assassination attempts—two of them were killed—all by left-wing or anarchistic actors.)

Any good news on the horizon? Probably not. According to Rachel Kleinfeld, a senior fellow at the Carnegie Endowment for Peace: The more people justify violence—from their side of the aisle, the more unhinged people will commit violence from that side. That will justify the other side in doing the same.

Unfortunately, neither side of the political aisle is toning down any of the rhetoric that is spurring these attacks.

As usual, our politicians—left and right—are exacerbating a problem, not fixing it, so expect this disquieting trend to continue into the future. ☆

Radical Gun Grabber Organization Finds Itself Up Against the Wall

Jacob Tyler

For veterans and gun owners across the country, the phrase “target neutralized” is music to the ears. That phrase now applies to March for Our Lives, the radical gun-grabbing organization founded by David Hogg, which is going down in an ideological hail of bullets thanks to a scandal that erupted earlier this year.

Or more accurately, a hail of ideological bullet points. Not fired by Second Amendment defenders but from a circular firing squad comprised of none other than MFOL’s own “mini-Maoist” foot soldiers. In their zeal, these young activists prove they are as ignorant of communism’s long history of bloody purges as they are of the American Republic’s values they so desperately want to dismantle.

The Financial Misfire

The first signs of the purge became a part of the public record on March 20, 2024. MFOL leadership laid off 13 of its 16 full-time employees, citing a “grim fundraising climate.” This corporate-speak translates to a simple fact: their operation was built on a faulty premise. An anti-gun crusade funded by far left and fair-weather donors is about as effective as a magazine full of blanks.

This mass termination would appear to have directly triggered the subsequent lawsuit. The disgruntled former staffers quickly weaponized the very charges of “racism” so often used to smear their opponents to sick the woke mob on their own organization. Sources suggest a perfect storm of incompetence and arrogance led to the financial collapse in the first place. Government funding streams reportedly dried up following audits, while the Parkland alum’s proclivity to hog the spotlight with his increasingly radical antics within the Democratic National Committee alienated the very establishment donors who kept the lights on.

Pandering for Profit

The lawsuit filed on July 18 lays bare the rotten core of MFOL’s operation, and it’s a revelation of pure, calculated cynicism. The irony of this being that the organization’s alleged “racism” likely wasn’t born of genuine personal prejudice. Instead, it was the result of cold, pragmatic market research.

Credit where it’s due, MFOL’s leadership simply knew their donor base—primarily wealthy, white, suburban liberals—and pandered directly to their preferences to maximize fundraising. They allegedly prioritized “white boy stories” for one simple reason: they were “easier to raise money” for.

In contrast, stories of “young black kids” were reportedly deemed a poor return on investment because, as one source put it, the donor class felt “they’ve heard that story.”

The Revolution Devours Its Children Once Again

This implosion follows the historical trajectory of every communist-style movement: the revolution inevitably liquidates its own. MFOL’s younger, more radical staffers reportedly demanded the organization expand its mission beyond gun control to a host of other progressive causes. The core gun-control message, it seems, wasn’t pure enough for the new guard.

When their demands were not met and they were subsequently fired, they did exactly what their radical ideology teaches them to do: they sought the political execution of their former bosses.

The modern left has forged “racism” into an all-purpose tool for purges. What we are witnessing is one Marxist-inspired creation (the gun control movement) being targeted for elimination by another (weaponized identity politics). It’s a Frankenstein monster turning on its own creator, in ways that make the classic literary work by Mary Shelley seem nigh unto prophetic.

David Hogg’s Last Stand

Once the poster boy for gun control, Hogg’s star has faded faster than a muzzle flash. His removal from the DNC’s executive committee last year is a case in point. While the official explanation was a quiet, bureaucratic reshuffling, the reality is that young talent is only valuable when it stays on message.

Hogg’s well-documented proclivity to conduct himself in such a way to where his name is also the word for his behavior in regard to the spotlight made him a liability. His signature public speaking style—a jarring spectacle of a baby-faced youngster in a business suit dropping f-bombs during cable news interviews—grated on the very DNC establishment he so often criticized. In a civilized political culture, a loose cannon who makes the leadership look bad is inevitably cut loose.

Now, he is forced to watch as his own organization goes down in a blazing inferno stoked by the very same ideological purity tests Hogg used his platform to promulgate. It’s fitting to fathom that George Washington’s famous quote about bureaucracies and governments being “... like fire, a dangerous servant and a fearful master” could have served as a warning to him and easily prevented the dumpster fire that is this whole debacle. But that would require humility, not hubris.

Narrative Collapse and Disarmament by Ideology

The collapse of March for Our Lives is more than the failure of one organization; it is a case study in leftist anarcho-cannibalism. Meanwhile, more established anti-gun giants like Everytown for Gun Safety—an organization known for its attempts to deceptively infiltrate the 2A community—are circling like vultures, ready to absorb what remains of MFOL’s donor base.

For an organization that sought to disarm Americans, being disarmed by its own ideology is the ultimate poetic justice. The entire affair calls to mind grainy photographs from the last century—a communist foot soldier, pistol in hand, standing over a kneeling victim who has outlived his usefulness to the revolution.

At this stage, MFOL is on its knees and against a heavily stained wall waiting for the inevitable report of a rifle fired by the fanatics in the very movement it helped create.

Lewis “Death Wind” Wetzel: Avenging Angel of the Frontier

Robert Rogers

In the raw crucible of the early American frontier, skill with a rifle wasn't sport—it was survival. Few embodied that truth like Lewis Wetzel, the man Native warriors called “Death Wind.” To settlers along the upper Ohio Valley, he was a defender and avenging angel; to soldiers and politicians, a dangerous vigilante. Whatever the view, none denied his mastery of woodcraft and guerilla fighting and his almost superhuman mastery of the flintlock musket.

For today's shooter who values the origins of the Second Amendment, Wetzel stands as a symbol of self-reliance—the armed citizen who refused to be dependent on distant authority for safety. His life, carved from a world of broken treaties and lonely cabins under siege, shows how discipline, accuracy, and preparedness made the difference between living free and dying nameless.

Forged on the Edge of Civilization

Born about 1763, probably in Pennsylvania's backcountry or along the South Branch of the Potomac, Wetzel was the German-descended son of John Wetzel and Mary Bonnet. By 1770 the family had pushed west to Wheeling Creek—then a thin line between settlement and wilderness.

At thirteen, while working the fields, Lewis and his brother Jacob were ambushed by Wyandot raiders. A musket ball scored his chest, and both boys were captured. Two days later they escaped barefoot through miles of wilderness. The ordeal would forever change him, igniting a fierce and often volatile resolve within him to never be the victim again.

A Rifleman Without Equal

Wetzel stood around 5'10", dark-eyed, wearing his hair to his knees—not out of vanity, but as a calculated challenge to any who would try to take his scalp. He could trail, shoot, and move like no one else. His hallmark skill was reloading his flintlock at a full run—a feat unmatched by even the most famous and iconic frontier fighters of history. Witnesses said he could load and fire three accurate shots before most men finished one while standing still.

The most famous documented demonstration of Wetzel's incredible skill occurred near Fort Henry in 1782. Four Shawnee warriors spotted him and gave chase. Wetzel fired once into the trees to goad them into thinking they had the upper hand, and sprinted off. The pursuers took the bait. At a full run he reloaded, wheeled, and dropped the lead warrior. Then the next. Then another. The fourth tried to flee; he didn't make it far. Instances like this suggest that Wetzel may well have been the deadliest fighter the frontier ever produced.

The Long Shadow of Frontier Justice

Wetzel's effectiveness on the border was legendary, but it came with a price. The wars of the Ohio

Country blurred the line between combatant and murderer; treaties signed in the East rarely meant safety in the West. To settlers who'd buried kin after “peace” agreements, diplomacy looked like surrender.

When a raid in 1786 killed Wetzel's father and brother, with their loss Wetzel lost all capacity for restraint. Later that year he gunned down Lenape chief Tegunteh, who was traveling under U.S. protection to a peace parley. To the Army it was cold-blooded murder; to frontier families, it was retribution for everyone who had paid a terrible price for putting their trust in paper promises. General Josiah Harmar had him jailed, but mobs of armed settlers threatened to storm the prison, and Wetzel walked free. The pattern repeated after he killed a Seneca chief two years later. Each time, the government treated him as a criminal; the settlers embraced him as a defender and avenging angel of sorts.

Wetzel's acts of violence weren't random—it was vengeance born from desperation and grief. The same government that jailed him had failed to guard its citizens. In that void, ordinary men became their own and only real protection. The settlers' loyalty to him wasn't bloodlust; it was recognition that an armed people are their own last line of defense when the government fails you and breaks its promises.

Brothers in the Wilderness

Wetzel moved among legends. His brother Martin scouted with Daniel Boone, and Simon Kenton—Boone's equal in courage—led the effort to free Lewis from jail in 1788. Such men operated by their own honor code: faith, grit, and marksmanship above all. Wetzel's name even surfaced in connection with Lewis and Clark; reports say he briefly joined their Corps of Discovery in 1804 as a hunter before parting ways—whether from temperament or boredom, no one knows. True or not, the tale shows the respect his skills commanded.

A Legacy Written in Blood and Lead

After the Treaty of Greenville in 1795 cooled the frontier wars, Wetzel drifted south through the Louisiana Territory and ended his days near Natchez, Mississippi, dying in 1808 at about forty-five. When his remains were moved home to West Virginia, they were easy to identify—by the long hair and the rifle buried with him.

Today, Wetzel County, West Virginia, and the Lewis Wetzel Rifle and Pistol Club keep his name alive, as do the novels of Zane Grey and Allan Eckert. For the shooting community, Wetzel's story isn't just history—it's our heritage. A reminder that guarding our liberties and our loved ones requires dedication and unflinching resolve.

Lewis Wetzel was no saint. But he embodies the American spirit: sometimes a hero, sometimes an outlaw—but always prepared, rifle in hand. In that, every sober and vigilant gun owner can recognize a kindred spirit.

Forgotten Firearms: The Colonial Grand sire of the Machine Gun

N.F.C.T. Editorial Staff

For gun enthusiasts and history buffs alike, the Puckle Gun stands as a testament to early innovation in firearms technology, being widely considered a colonial era machine gun of sorts.

Patented in 1718—over 70 years before the ratification of the Second Amendment—this British invention represented a bold leap toward rapid-fire capabilities, challenging the limitations of single-shot muskets. While it never achieved mass production, its design foreshadowed the repeating arms that would quickly transform warfare and self-defense in the years to come. Drawing from primary sources like the original patent and contemporary advertisements, this article explores its origins, mechanics, and enduring legacy in the evolution of guns.

Development and Mechanical Design and Operation

James Puckle, a London-based lawyer, inventor, and writer, secured British Patent No. 418 on May 15, 1718, for his “Defence Gun.” Motivated by the constant harassment of British merchant ships by Ottoman pirates in the Mediterranean, Puckle envisioned a weapon that could repel boarding parties with sustained fire. The patent described a portable, crew-operated firearm capable of defending ships, bridges, and fortifications—a direct response to the asymmetric tactics of fast-moving enemy vessels.

Puckle promoted his invention aggressively, forming a company and distributing printed fliers that highlighted its versatility for “ships, boats, houses and other places.”

A surviving advertisement from 1718 serves as a primary source, emphasizing its role in protecting British interests during an era of imperial expansion and religious conflict.

A distinctive element of the design was the provision for different projectiles: round bullets for use against Christian adversaries and square ones against Muslims, intended to inflict greater wounds as a deterrent during clashes with the Ottoman Empire, which had long involved raids and enslavement along European coasts. The patent explicitly noted that square bullets aimed to “convince the Turks of the benefits of Christian civilization.”

In ballistic terms, the square rounds tumbled on impact but proved less reliable than anticipated, often failing to deliver the intended devastation.

Despite its ingenuity, the Puckle Gun faltered in production. Its complex components demanded machining precision unavailable to most 18th-century craftsmen, resulting in high costs and investor skepticism. Only prototypes were built, with two extant examples preserved at the Tower of London and Buckler’s Hard Maritime Museum. A 1722 shipping manifest records just two “Machine Guns of Puckles” exported, underscoring its limited reach.

How It Worked and Handled

At its core, the Puckle Gun was a manually cranked, tripod-mounted revolver with a 3-foot barrel and 1.25-inch (32mm) bore, akin to a light cannon for anti-personnel use. It employed a flintlock ignition system, where a flint struck steel to spark black powder in one of six to nine pre-loaded chambers within a detachable cylinder.

Operation required a small crew: one to aim and fire, another to crank the handle rotating the next chamber into alignment. This allowed sequential discharges without reloading, and spare cylinders enabled prolonged fire. Though not fully automatic, its rate-of-fire experiments marked it as a precursor to 19th-century innovations like the Gatling gun, bridging the gap between muskets and machine guns.

The Puckle Gun In Use

Historical records of the Puckle Gun in action are limited but include notable public demonstrations. In 1722, Puckle showcased the weapon, reportedly firing nine rounds per minute—triple the rate of a skilled musketeer—which impressed observers and was documented in contemporary reports. These tests highlighted its potential for shipboard defense, though no detailed eyewitness accounts of the firing mechanics or accuracy survive beyond general praise for its speed.

Modern analyses, such as those by firearms historians and replicas tested in videos (e.g., from the Forgotten Weapons channel on YouTube), confirm the gun’s functionality but note challenges like cylinder alignment and flintlock reliability.

There are no primary records of combat use, as the gun never entered service with British forces. But the Puckle Gun’s history includes a few colorful anecdotes that underscore its quirky fate.

The only documented sale was in 1722 to John, the 2nd Duke of Montagu, a notorious practical joker known for pranks like dumping cold water on the French philosopher Montesquieu. The Duke purchased two guns for his ill-fated expedition to conquer the Caribbean islands of St. Lucia and St. Vincent, an unauthorized venture that ended in failure due to disease, local resistance, and French intervention.

Whether the guns were fired during the campaign remains unrecorded, but their inclusion suggests the Duke saw potential in the novel design for colonial adventures.

Another tidbit involves production royalties: A 1721 newspaper noted payments to investor Peter Hartopp of two shillings per share for guns sold, hinting at early financial arrangements or perhaps royalties—though with so few units, it amounted to little.

In modern times, one prototype was reportedly “lost” in the Danish Army Museum’s storage, mislabeled and forgotten until rediscovered, adding to the gun’s elusive aura.

Although other highly destructive weapons innovations of the period, like the Flintlock Grenade Launcher and the Ghirandoni Air Rifle that we’ve covered in an earlier issue were greatly sought after by the colonials, there is no indicator that the Puckle Gun ever made it to American shores, likely owing to its scarcity and overall obscurity.

The Puckle Gun’s Legacy

Though commercially unsuccessful, the Puckle Gun’s legacy endures as one of the earliest patented repeating firearms, often hailed as the world’s first “machine gun” in period documents.

For modern gun owners, it serves as a reminder that innovation in arms technology has always been part of human ingenuity in the course of endeavoring to protect all that we love and hold dear.

Why the “Muskets Only” Argument is Historically Illiterate Nonsense

Jack Hinson

In the persistent debate over firearms regulations, opponents of the right to keep and bear arms frequently argue that the framers of the Second Amendment, ratified in 1791, could not have anticipated weapons beyond basic muskets. However, a review of primary historical documents—ranging from patents and congressional resolutions to personal correspondence—reveals the Founding Fathers’ familiarity with and support for advanced repeating and breech-loading firearms, among other highly lethal armaments.

These innovative weapons of war were not only known about, but actively considered and sought after in multiple instances, for military and civilian use, undermining claims that the amendment was limited to primitive tools for hunting or self-defense.

The Puckle Gun

Patented in 1718 by British inventor James Puckle, the Puckle Gun was a tripod-mounted flintlock with a crank-operated revolving cylinder accommodating six to nine rounds, achieving a firing rate of nine shots per minute—three times that of a standard musket.

Although no direct references exist in the Founders’ writings, the gun’s patent and public demonstrations were chronicled in European military publications making it extremely unlikely that the Founders were not aware of it and watching its development with keen interest.

The Belton Flintlock

In 1777, inventor Joseph Belton presented his repeating flintlock musket to the Continental Congress, a design employing superimposed loads in a single barrel to fire up to 20 balls in seconds through sequential ignition. Belton’s correspondence described the weapon discharging “eight balls one after another, in eight, five or three seconds,” with proven accuracy at 30 yards during demonstrations.

The Continental Congress, including Benjamin Franklin—a key figure on the Congressional Committee of Safety responsible for arms procurement from Europe—issued a resolution on May 3, 1777, authorizing production of 100 units at one dollar per discharge capacity. Proving his endorsement of rapid-fire technology.

The Girandoni Air Rifle

Developed around 1779 by Bartolomeo Girandoni, the Girandoni air rifle was a .46-caliber repeater featuring a tubular magazine holding 20 to 22 shots, propelled by compressed air for silent, smokeless firing at rates up to 20 rounds per minute.

Thomas Jefferson is known to have acquired several of them, and was so convinced of their worth that he recommended one for the 1803 Lewis and Clark expedition, and reportedly furnished the very one they took with them. He noted in a letter to Meriwether Lewis its capability for “22 occasions of letting a ball successively without a moment’s delay.” Jefferson’s ownership and promotion of the rifle for exploratory and defensive purposes reflect his support for high-capacity repeating arms in civilian contexts.

The Ferguson Rifle

British Major Patrick Ferguson’s 1776-patented rifle introduced breech-loading via a screw plug mechanism, enabling reloads in seconds and a firing rate of up to seven rounds per minute with rifled accuracy extending to 300 yards. Ferguson commanded a specialized unit equipped with these rifles at the 1777 Battle of Brandywine, where they engaged forces led by George Washington, causing notable casualties before Ferguson’s injury.

Washington gained firsthand awareness of this superior breech-loading system deployed against his troops through reports from his officers, and would have been eager to requisition such weapons for his troops.

The Hall Breech-Loader

American inventor John Hancock Hall patented his .52-caliber breech-loading flintlock (later adapted to percussion) with a pivoting breechblock for rapid cartridge insertion, doubling reload speeds compared to muzzle-loaders and offering effective range to 300 yards.

The U.S. Army adopted it as the M1819 Hall rifle, producing thousands at Harpers Ferry Armory with innovative interchangeable parts. In a July 15, 1818, letter to Thomas Jefferson, Hall described his design as merging the benefits of rifles and muskets for national defense while seeking guidance on militia reforms. All during Jefferson’s presidency and under government directive.

The Magazine-Fed Kalthoff Flintlock Repeater

The Kalthoff repeater, created in the 1630s by the Kalthoff brothers, was a lever-action flintlock with internal magazines storing up to 30 balls and powder charges for swift sequential firing, serving Danish royal guards by the mid-1600s. Predating the Revolution by more than a century, its mechanics were detailed in European arms treatises consulted by Franklin and Jefferson in their military studies. Scholarly reviews affirm the Founders’ acquaintance with these repeating precursors, which informed subsequent American innovations.

The Cookson Multi-Barrel Volley Gun

John Cookson’s 1750s volley gun utilized a rotating drum to deliver up to nine shots in sequence or salvo, marketed for repelling assaults on vessels or positions. George Washington, familiar with British and European military literature, would have most certainly have read more than a few descriptions of such multi-barrel devices, which influenced the period’s emphasis on enhanced firing capacity in line with the Founders’ strategic priorities.

The Lorenzoni Lever-Action Flintlock Repeater

Dating to the late 1600s, the Lorenzoni repeating flintlock employed a lever to cycle seven to ten charges from concealed magazines, with production extending into the 18th century as recorded in gunsmithing manuals. Jefferson’s mechanical expertise and Franklin’s European connections make it overwhelmingly likely that they were quite familiar with these systems, as historical accounts note their contribution to pre-Constitutional firearm evolution.

The Nock Multi-Barrel Volley Gun

Henry Nock’s 1779 volley gun consisted of seven barrels for simultaneous or staged fire, adopted by the British Navy despite recoil issues. As U.S.

minister to France, Franklin facilitated the importation of thousands of advanced weapons, including multi-barrel variants akin to the Nock from allied sources, as evidenced by archival procurement records linking him to these volley technologies.

The Flintlock Grenade Launcher

The flintlock hand mortar, refined in the early 1700s from late-17th-century designs, was a portable shoulder-fired tube (typically .6 to 1-inch bore) ignited by flintlock to propel fused iron grenades up to 100 yards—farther and more accurately than hand-throwing. Employed in sieges and naval boardings to deliver explosive payloads over walls or onto decks, it equipped grenadier units for area-denial tactics. George Washington integrated grenadier companies into the Continental Army, arming them with these launchers as documented in military returns from 1775–1783, while Congress pursued imports of grenades and mortars through Benjamin Franklin’s European procurement networks, demonstrating their support for destructive explosive weaponry in militia hands.

It’s worth noting here, that no records whatsoever exist of Founders expressing apprehension about or addressing the rapid development of “assault weapons” on American soil, or concern that perhaps their alleged “muskets only” intention for the Second Amendment might be undermined by the the inevitability of citizens possessing any of these weapons themselves.

In addition to these many examples of not just active endeavors to develop weaponry of comparable destructive capacity to what we have today, but outright endorsements of and efforts to procure them—not to mention the direct and significant role some of these weapons played in the American Revolution, there are some other major points of consideration:

Privateer Cannons: Washington’s Policy on Civilian Artillery

Privateers, which were not military vessels, but privately owned, were outfitted with up to 20 guns under letters of marque authorized by George Washington.

Naval logs from 1778 document over 600 British captures through this program, endorsed by Congress, thoroughly illustrating Washington’s backing for unrestricted civilian possession of highly destructive weaponry. Doubly noteworthy considering that it’s unheard of in this day and age for civilian-owned boats to be outfitted with any sort of weaponry at all.

Madison’s Vision: Unrestricted Arms for Citizen Militias

As the primary architect of the Bill of Rights, James Madison articulated in Federalist No. 46 (1788) the role of a “half a million of citizens with arms in their hands” in countering governmental overreach. His initial draft of the Second Amendment declared “the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed,” without technological constraints.

From early repeaters to battlefield artillery, the Founders’ many documented interactions with sophisticated arms affirm a 2nd Amendment designed to encompass technological progress. The many examples here conclusively prove that the popular assertion that “the Founders’ envisioned single shot muskets used primarily for hunting” when 2A was inked can only be made in appalling levels of ignorance of and cognitive dissonance about the historical record. ☆

The History of Money Creation, Banks, and the Federal Reserve

By Conrad LeBeau
(Part I of a Series)

Inside the archives of the Federal Reserve Bank of St Louis MO is an original copy of "The Federal Reserve Act" signed President Woodrow Wilson on Dec 23, 1913.

Recently, I was able to obtain a copy through an external link from Wikipedia that I downloaded to my computer. A copy (not marked up) is one of several exhibits in the Appendix to this treatise called "A Critical Review of the Federal Reserve."

The Act itself can be compared to a shotgun wedding where the bride (Congress) is led down the aisle with her spouse, the devil, who is dressed as a respectable banker in a three-piece business suit.

Of course, there is much fanfare as the band plays and flowers adorn the aisle and vows are exchanged between the spouses to love, cherish and be loyal to each other until death do they part. Thus, this unholy wedding occurred between wealthy Wall

St bankers and the US Government on Dec 23, 1913.

Now, as the loan sharks of the privately owned Federal Reserve Banking System come to collect on massive mounting public and private debts, or foreclose on people's homes, businesses and farms, consider this brief review of the history of money and banks, its creation and origins.

To quote the late and honorable Fr. Charles E Coughlin in his 1936 book on "Money! Questions and Answers" he wrote in the Foreword of his book a title he cryptically discarded: "Your Money or Your Life!" or is it?

What Is Money?

Historically, barter was the first form of money. Thousands of years ago, the Egyptians used wheat as a medium of exchange (money). However, because gold and silver did not spoil like food does over time, precious metals became the preferred medium for exchanging products and services locally, and was the preferred form of money used in trade.

Money is an artificial creation of man and is defined by governments around the world. Money does not exist in nature nor do debts exist nor do corporations or banks exist.

Money is a medium of exchange for equal values. In civilized societies, money is assigned, by the authority of government, a numerical value, and is used as a common denominator for purchasing goods and services, including the paying of debts and taxes.

In 1775, the Continental Congress issued their own form of currency known as "Continental Currency" and it helped pay for the war against King George.

During the war, England waged economic warfare against the states by counterfeiting and circulating fake notes of Continental currency causing them to lose much of their value.

The word "Money" has taken on multiple meanings over time. First, it was gold and silver coins, then paper currency redeemable in gold and silver, and then fiat currency as in "United States Notes" printed during the Civil war under Pres. Abraham Lincoln. Eventually, fiat currency included "Federal Reserve Notes" printed after June 24, 1968 when they were no longer redeemable in silver coins.

AMERICAN CRAFTSMANSHIP MADE IN THE USA

What Is The Best Handgun for Home Defense?

David Crockett

For Americans considering their first handgun—whether for home defense, personal protection, or simply exercising their Second Amendment rights—the options can be daunting. Between brand loyalty, caliber debates, and price points, the market is saturated with opinions. But beneath the noise, some choices rise to the top for their reliability, ease of use, and practical value.

The website, Pew Pew Tactical recently published a hands-on guide to beginner-friendly handguns, testing each model with over 2,500 rounds to separate marketing from performance. Their findings offer a useful snapshot for new shooters and seasoned owners alike:

The Glock 19 Gen 5 leads the pack as a dependable all-around choice. It's compact enough for concealed carry, yet large enough for comfortable handling at the range or on the nightstand. With a reputation for reliability and a straightforward manual of arms, it's a solid pick for those who want a no-nonsense defensive tool.

For those who prefer a full-size pistol, the Walther PDP stands out. Its trigger is crisp, its ergonomics are refined, and it comes optics-ready—ideal for shooters who plan to train regularly or integrate red dot sights. It's a modern platform that doesn't sacrifice simplicity.

On the higher end, the Sig Sauer P365 XMacro offers impressive capacity and modularity in a compact frame. It's a feature-rich option for those who want premium performance without bulk. While it may be overkill for some, its accuracy and adaptability make it a compelling choice.

Budget-conscious buyers aren't left out. The Smith & Wesson Equalizer delivers soft recoil, an easy-to-rack slide, and a price tag that won't break the bank. It's especially well-suited for shooters with limited hand strength or those just starting out.

For revolver enthusiasts, the S&W Model 686 Plus offers a classic feel with modern reliability. Chambered in .357 Magnum but capable of firing .38 Special, it's versatile and straightforward—ideal for those who value mechanical simplicity and proven design.

The HK VP9 rounds out the list with fully ambidextrous controls and excellent ergonomics. Left-handed shooters or those seeking intuitive handling will appreciate its thoughtful layout and robust build.

Beyond the specific models, the guide emphasizes fundamentals: choosing a manageable caliber (9mm is the consensus), understanding safety features, and investing in proper training. Accessories like weapon-mounted lights and protective gear are also discussed, reinforcing the importance of preparedness over impulse buying.

Whether you're buying your first handgun or helping someone else navigate the process, clarity and community feedback matters.

The full guide published by PewPew Tactical is far more in-depth, and brings the data backing up their conclusions. Give it a read here, and tell them your friends at The National Firearms Coalition Today sent you, while you're at it:

This Remarkable Formula Has Saved Thousands of Lives . . . And You've Probably Never Heard Of It . . .

Zeolite has been used for more than 800 years as a remedy for overall health. But it was the nuclear catastrophe at Chernobyl that really showed the world the remarkable healing properties of the substance contained in these little bottles. In the wake of the fallout of that horrific event, its binding power was proven conclusively when tons of it was used to remove radioactive cesium and strontium from contaminated water systems.

Zeolite is a volcanic mineral with a unique, complex crystalline structure. Its honeycomb framework of cavities and channels, like cages, works at the cellular level capturing radioactive particles, heavy metals and other toxins and taking them safely out of the body without removing beneficial nutrients. Its pH balancing effect promotes healthy brain function and a strong immune system.

When you buy 6 bottles of their Liquid Zeolite, you get a 7th bottle for free.

How Your $99 Membership Due Yields $4-10K In Less Than Twelve Months . . .

From the Desk of the Editor

Dear Reader and future N.F.C. member;

I'm gonna tell you a story today, that probably will resonate with you personally—and it's all about your money and your taxes. Could you, or you and your spouse, use an extra $400 to $500 per month over the next 20-30 years?

Silly question, right? (The answer is, of course!)

Bear with me for a moment and I'll explain how you, or any employed American gun owner, can receive this real tax free money by filling out 4-6 simple pages of federal forms. I have followed this exact process every year since 1978, and I also taught my three sons how to do the same each year.

Example Number One:

When I was young and first married, I was a carpenter and lived in the San Fernando Valley, California. We bought our first house together. The price was $21,500 and our monthly mortgage payment was $106.

"So what's that got to do with me," you ask? There was no such thing as $200,000 houses and $1,000 per month mortgage payments.

In those days, America was great, the economy was the best in the world, and most men earned enough money to support their family with that weekly paycheck; wives did not have to work, but today, as you well know, almost everywhere in USA, it requires two paychecks every month to support a normal family!

Example Number Two:

What I will now illustrate for you, is how to obtain this "easy money/extra income" every month, for many years. I can honestly say "been there, done that." What's the catch you ask? There is no catch; this is the truth; this is statutory law. Only catch is that the government check you will receive, comes once a year, ($4,000 to $10,000), just after Christmas, instead of monthly checks for unemployment, or welfare.

You are entitled to this big check every year, if you choose to claim it by filling out the 4-6 Federal Government forms you are not familiar with. Remember the golden rule: Knowledge is power . . . and in all likelihood, you lack the specific knowledge of how to obtain this free money from the U.S. Treasury.

Okay, here's the deal: The free money every year for you and your spouse, is actually described as "huge income tax refunds" every April 15th.

Facts are facts: IRS has over 200 "forms" that you can chose from, to file your annual 1040 returns each year. They also publish a "code book" that is 5,000 pages long, printed in size 6 font. I bought one many years ago when they cost $150.00. Does your tax preparer have this book? No. But I do!

Therefore, all N.F.C. members qualify for our "tax preparation service."

The initial conference (by phone) is free, wherein you discuss your tax status and the amount of "net taxes" you paid after any refund you may have received with one of our CPA-Paralegals. (He will approximate your refund amount.)

Not all Americans qualify for our service: if you live in Canada, Mexico, or Europe, we can't help you. If you are employed by the Federal Government, we can't help you. If you are in a senior care facility or engaged in a dangerous profession, we can't help you.

If you still file 1040 tax returns every year, you can be described as an uninformed, volunteer tax slave, paying an outrageous "tithe," to an un-Constitutional collection agency known as the IRS, which was never Established in law by Congress.

In addition, the trillions of dollars that IRS extorts from most Americans, does not go to the U.S. Treasury! It goes to the private banking cartel known as the Federal Reserve. Which is not federal and has no reserves, except Federal I.O.U's.

N.F.C. will help you with several IRS forms that will virtually wipe out much of your tax liability. Here are two of them you never saw before. Look them up online and be shocked with new knowledge:

(1) IRS form 4562, and (2) "Unrestricted Claim of Right 1939 ~ 26 USC 1341.

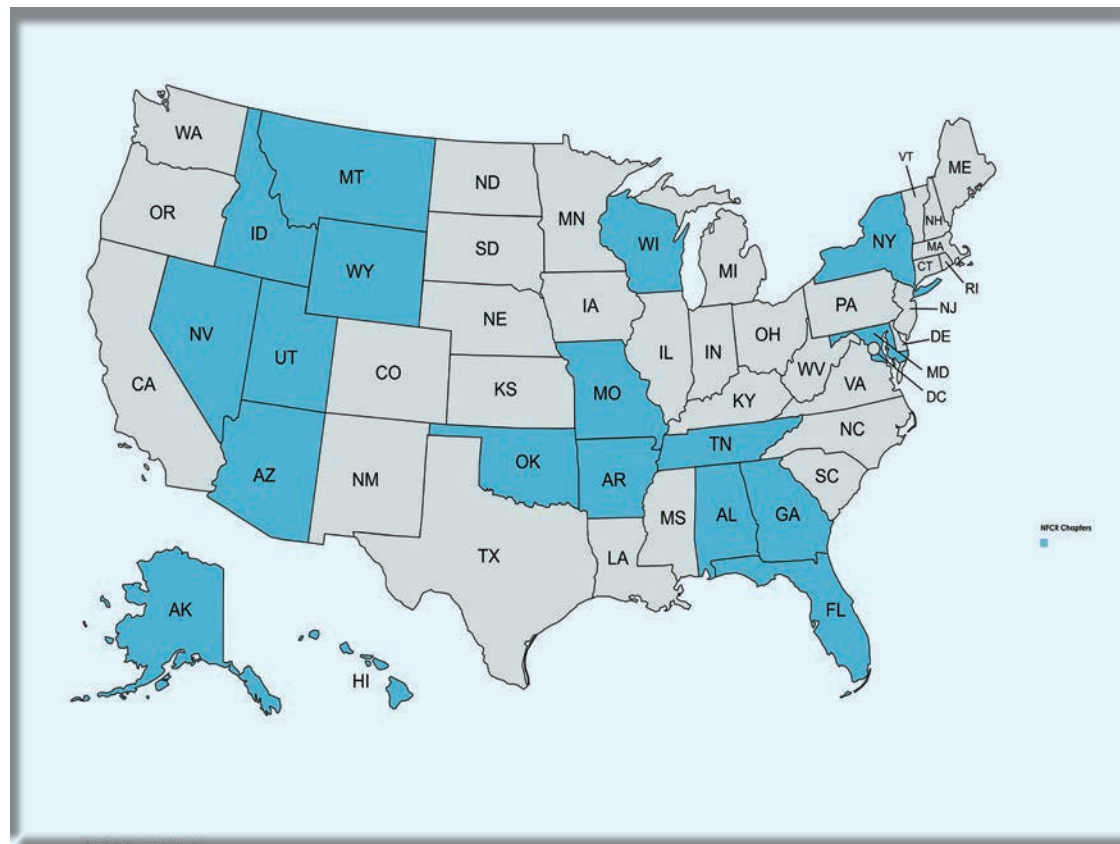

So what can we conclude from all of this? That when you realize how much money of all Americans' Tax dollars are wasted by the corrupt U.S. Congress, it should make you boiling mad!

Can you stop them for "stealing your tax dollars? NO!

Conversely, you can stop volunteering to be an ignorant slave and stop giving them your tax dollars you volunteered to give them by using their recommended tax forms and then they hide all the other forms that reduce your tax liability to almost zero!

Should you need our assistance, just go to our website ~ www.2nd-acp.com and click on the link "Tax Preparation Service." Once you do that, you'll want to print out the application and e-mail it to us, or use snail mail, for your free consultation conference.

One of our certifiably human, USA-residing experts will phone you back to set your appointment.
